Kosher Food

people can eat together. The (and any birds) should

Box 1- Kosher food in the home

There are rules about which foods Jewish people can eat together. Torah states that meat foods (red meat, chicken and any birds) should be eaten in the same meal with dairy foods. So, if you have meat for dinner you cannot have milk, cheese or butter with it, this means burgers are completely out! Also, if you have meat for dinner you should not eat any dairy foods for four hours afterwards. This means no yoghurt or ice cream for dessert. The reason for this rule is because the Torah says that you should not use a calf and its mother's milk at the same time. Many people believe that fish is not meat so they can eat fish and dairy foods is not as difficult as it sounds as you can have fish and dairy products like bread, cereals and ice creams without dairy products.

foods in their kitchen they have to have two sinks and dairy foods.

Some foods which are made by kosher factories have been made in kosher factories. Some brands of foods and be sure that no non-kosher ingredients are included in the ingredients. The most common kosher food is called OSEM. There make a list of kosher soups, cakes, biscuits and snacks.

How do different Jewish people respond to kosher laws?

Very religious Jews such as Hassidic Jews will be very strict about what they eat because they believe that by following the kosher laws they are being obedient to God. They will buy most of their food from kosher supermarkets and they will only eat in kosher restaurants. They will also make sure that they never mix meat and dairy foods. They would never eat in places such as McDonald's and Burger King as the meat used is not kosher and also McDonald's kitchens use the same cutlery and crockery for meat and dairy products. Hassidic Jews will buy most of their food from the kosher OSEM brand. Hassidic Jews will also have two sinks in their kitchens, one for meat and one for dairy.

However, not all Jewish rules. Reform Jews believe that some kosher rules are not necessary and that animals such as pigs can be eaten. So Reform Jews do not mix meat and dairy. So Reform Jews do not have long periods of time when people in their kitchen are not allowed to eat. So Reform Jews do not have long periods of time when people in their kitchen are not allowed to eat.
